Croydon Joint Strategic Needs Assessment Key Dataset

Introduction

Introduction
This key dataset forms a part of the overarching Croydon Joint Strategic Needs Assessment (JSNA).
For more details on the Croydon JSNA, please go to the website here; https://www.croydonobservatory.org/jsna/

This dataset brings together local, regional and national data to show Croydon's relative position for a wealth of indicators of relevance to health and wellbeing.

By using indicators for which regional and national data is available, comparisons can be made of Croydon's performance or levels of need now and in the future. Indicators where Croydon's performance or level of need are statistically significantly different from the London average are highlighted, and trend data indicate whether performance is improving or deteriorating over time. Areas where Croydon performs better or worse, or has greater or lesser need than the London average can therefore be easily identified, making the dataset, along with the rest of the JSNA, a key tool to inform strategic prioritisation and commissioning decisions.

The main limitation to the dataset, and to all comparative data of this kind, is that of timeliness. Most of this information is taken from the Office for Health Improvement and Disparities (OHID) fingertips tool and, although the most recent available data from this tool has been used for all indicators, there will still be an inevitable time lag. This is because the dataset contains only those indicators which are routinely published for local authorities across the country. In practice, local areas may use more timely data sources to inform their daily work, as they have access to their own data sooner than comparative information of the kind shown here.

It is also important to note that the data presented in the dataset are for Croydon as a whole. There are wide variations within Croydon that must always be taken into account when commissioning services for Croydon. Any analysis of need should not be dictated solely by areas for which data is available. Stakeholder consultations often raise important local issues for which local data may not be available. Other aspects of the JSNA, particularly the detailed needs assessments on key topic areas, include more qualitative, consultative approaches which are also a key part of prioritisation and commissioning.

Notes and Key
> Indicators that are shaded blue rather than red / amber / green are presented in this way because it is not straightforward to determine for these indicators whether a high value is good or bad.
> Recent trend refers to the analysis done in the DHSC Fingertips tool which tests for a statistical trend. Changes in this column are calculated using a chi-squared statistical test for trend. This is currently only available for certain indicator types; full details are available in the DHSC tool (see data source column to access this).
> Increases or decreases are only shown if they are statistically significant. Where no arrow is shown, no comparison has been made. This may be due to the fact that the required data to make the comparison is not available for the time point, or that no confidence interval values are available for the indicator.

Croydon value, significance compared to London average:

Significantly worse	Significantly lower
Not significantly different	Significantly higher
Significantly better	Significance not tested

Recent trend:

Increasing / Getting worse	Increasing / Getting better
Decreasing / Getting worse	Decreasing / Getting better
Increasing	Decreasing
No significant change	Could not be calculated
